THE JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN JUDICATURE SOCIETY

- 464 Letters
On the interim suspension of Judge Del Rio.
- Kermit W. Netteburg*
- 466 Does research support the Estes ban on cameras in the courtroom?
When the Supreme Court prohibited trial photography in 1965, its decision depended mostly upon conjecture and hypothesis. Today research is beginning to show that cameras do not create all the dangers that the Court imagined.
- Donald Paragon*
- 476 Some firsthand observations on China's legal system
With the adoption of a new constitution in 1978, China took a major step toward modernizing its legal system. Here an American observer examines some of the changes and their effects on legal research and procedure and on the administration of justice.
- William E. Hoelzel*
- 485 A survey of 27 victim compensation programs
In the past 15 years, 27 states have decided to help pay medical expenses and earnings losses for the one person the criminal justice system too often neglects—the victim.
- Manny S. Brown*
- 497 Wisconsin's victim compensation program
Wisconsin spends almost $1 million on victim compensation in the hopes that its program will encourage people to report crime and support law enforcement.
- Geoff Gallas*
- 501 The 'critics' reply to Dale Good
- Stuart Nagel*
- 504 Political outcomes and case diversity in judicial reform
- 506 Index to Volume 63
