More opposition to South Carolina's bar admission rules.

Alan Neff

256 Breaking with tradition: a study of the U.S. District judge nominating commissions

The commissions established by senators in 30 states to help choose U.S. District court judges opened the process to more participants and selected a more diverse group of candidates.

William E. Hoetzel

279 No easy answers: a report on the National Conference for Judicial Conduct Organizations

More than 180 commissioners and staff met recently to examine the new problems of disciplinary systems which, in many states, were established only in the last 10 years.

David M. O'Brien

285 Of judicial myths, motivations and justifications: a postscript on social science and the law

Allan Greenberg

290 How a Connecticut county converted a supermarket into a courthouse

A conversion gave one county a new courthouse in a third of the time and at half the cost of building a new structure.
