- 434 Letters
On fair pay and judicial independence
- Charles M. Merrill 435 Query
Could judges deliver more justice if they wrote fewer opinions?
- Steven Puro
Roger L. Goldman and Alice M. Padawer-Singer 436 The evolving role of U.S. magistrates in the district courts
In 1968, Congress created a new corps of judicial officers to help the district courts with their ever-increasing caseloads. A new study finds the courts are making good use of this help, mostly in pretrial matters.
- Paul Nejelski 450 The Jeffersonian/Hamiltonian duality: a framework for understanding reforms in the administration of justice
For two centuries, our nation has been engaged in a debate over whether the justice system should embody more of Jefferson's populism or Hamilton's autocratic notions. The tension produces a distinctively American system of justice.
- 463 Books
From Ballot to Bench
by Philip L. Dubois
- 465 Focus
Florida conference examines education of court administrators. Also: Decisions of note.
- 472 Index to Volume 64
