AMERICAN JUDICATURE SOCIETY

Volume 65, Number 3 September, 1981

- 124 Editorial
On limiting the jurisdiction of federal courts.
- 125 Letters
On the cost of justice and judicial salaries.
- William A. Macauley and Edward J. Heubel* 126 Achieving representative juries: a system that works
Simple diligence in tracking down prospective jurors can yield panels that mirror the makeup of the whole community, a new study shows.
- Robert T. Roper and Albert P. Melone* 136 Does procedural due process make a difference? A study of second trials
A study of 1,159 remanded cases suggests that due process procedures clearly protect rights and may even strengthen the social legitimacy of courts.
- Eric Neisser* 142 The new federal judicial discipline act: some questions Congress didn't answer
As the restructured judicial councils begin to implement the federal discipline act, they need to address some practical questions about its operation. Their answers will be critical to the ultimate success of the new process.
- 161 Books
A new ABA series on law and American history, law and philosophy and law and American literature.
- 166 Focus
A Massachusetts program that brings kids to courts—and courts to kids. Also: Decisions of note.
