- Henry J. Abraham 178 Limiting federal court jurisdiction: a self-inflicted wound?
Judicial forays into prescriptive policy-making have prompted current congressional efforts to curb the courts.
- Kenneth R. Kay 185 Limiting federal court jurisdiction: the unforeseen impact on courts and Congress
Limiting jurisdiction will not change past Supreme Court decisions; in fact, it will leave American rights and liberties vulnerable to the whims of future Congresses and the states.
- Charles E. Rice 190 Limiting federal court jurisdiction: the constitutional basis for the proposals in Congress today
Both Article III of the Constitution and precedent clearly support congressional withdrawal of court jurisdiction.
- Telford Taylor 198 Limiting federal court jurisdiction: The unconstitutionality of current legislative proposals
Though Congress may have the power to restrict federal court jurisdiction, it cannot use that power to abrogate fundamental constitutional rights.
- Stephen L. Wasby 209 Arrogation of power or accountability: "judicial imperialism" revisited
The "imperial judiciary" is an illusion. Judges only exercise power given them by others and remain accountable both to professional interests and the public.
