- 316 Letters
- Peter Finn* 318 Judicial responses to prison crowding
While many judges apparently are altering their sentencing practices in response to inmate population increases, there is no consensus among the judiciary as to its responsibility for resolving the prison crowding problem.
- Daniel W. Shuman* 326 Decisionmaking under conditions of uncertainty
Decisions by both courts and legislatures often have little empirical basis. More rigorous judicial review of the facts underlying legislation could help ensure better informed, careful decisionmaking.
- Dwight W. Stevenson and James P. Zappen* 336 An approach to writing trial court opinions
Because appellate and trial court opinion functions differ, we must adapt what we know about appellate court opinions to improve lower court opinions.
- William L. Norton, Jr. and Richard Lieb* 346 Ending the bankruptcy jurisdiction dilemma—an Article III bankruptcy court approach
Bifurcated bankruptcy jurisdiction will cause unnecessary confusion and delay; the answer is to vest jurisdiction in a separate Article III bankruptcy court.
- Robert E. DeMascio* 354 Bankruptcy: A solution in search of a problem
A separate Article III bankruptcy court is both unnecessary and unwise. Bankruptcy administrators could handle 90 per cent of the cases filed.
- 360 Books
- Norbert L. Kerr* Inside the jury by Reid Hastie, Steven D. Penrod, and Nancy Pennington
- David W. Neubauer* Speedy Trial: Federal and State Practice by Robert L. Misner
