MEDIATION QUARTERLY

VOLUME 15
NUMBER 2
WINTER 1997

SPONSORED BY THE ACADEMY OF FAMILY MEDIATORS

Jossey-Bass Publishers

CONTENTS

EDITOR'S NOTES 79

PRACTICE

Conflict Management and Mediation Training: A Vehicle for Community Empowerment? 83
Jennifer P. Maxwell
The author describes the use of an elicitive training design and delivery in a mediation training program, and considers the impact of that training approach on the trainees.

Confidence-Building Measures in Mediation 97
Daryl Landau, Sy Landau
Confidence-building measures, first used in international negotiations, can lead to the development of trust when employed in mediation of interpersonal disputes.

RESEARCH

Strategies in Mediation Explored and Developed During a Research Project 105
Odd Arne Tjersland
During a three-year research project in Oslo, Norway, researchers observed, described, and evaluated four types of mediator strategies: motivating, structuring, confirming, and meaning-expanding.

Action-Evaluation and Conflict Resolution: In Theory and Practice 119
Jay Rothman
The important connections between theory and practice in mediation are explored through the author's research project, using an action-evaluation research approach to the evaluation of conflict resolution programs and projects.

THEORY

What Is a Model for Mediation Practice? A Critical Review of Family Mediation: Contemporary Issues 133
Dorothy J. Della Noce
This review considers the model of mediation set out in a recent book, and raises questions about the definition of a coherent model of mediation.

CORTE SUPREMA
BIBLIOTECA
SIG. TOPOGRAFICA 2.20
INVENTARIO 154264

Can't I Get No Satisfaction? Thoughts on The Promise of Mediation 143
Michael Williams

The author raises and addresses the question of whether the problem-solving approach has a continuing place in the field of mediation.

Kilometer 101: Oasis or Mirage? An Analysis of Third-Party Self-Interest in International Mediation 155
Matthew A. Levitt

This article presents a study of Henry Kissinger's Middle East mediation efforts and considers implications for the role of mediators dealing with interpersonal conflicts.