International Law and International Relations Theory: A New Generation of Interdisciplinary Scholarship
Anne-Marie Slaughter, Andrew S. Tulumello and Stepan Wood	367
Scholars of international law and international relations have rediscovered one another. This article reviews the burgeoning "IR/IL" literature of recent years, examining how lawyers have employed IR theory in the analysis of international law and institutions and how they have challenged IR theory by reasserting the distinctive role of law in explanations of international affairs. The authors conclude by posing six substantive research questions around which an interdisciplinary research agenda might be built.
The WTO Legal System: Sources of Law
David Palmeter and Petros C. Mavroidis	398
The rapidly expanding law of the World Trade Organization is based on the texts of the WTO Agreements, but increasingly WTO dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body look to the larger field of public international law in deciding cases. Virtually all of the sources of law in Article 38(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice have served, in varying degrees, as sources of law in the WTO. The authors examine the development and significance of each of these sources of law in WTO jurisprudence.
"Indigenous Peoples" in International Law: A Constructivist Approach to the Asian Controversy
Benedict Kingsbury	414
"Indigenous peoples" as an international legal concept has been justified by particular histories in states formed by European colonial settlement, but is increasingly applied globally, prompting sharp protests and calls for a narrow definition by several Asian states. This article proposes broader justifications and a flexible, but focused, definition. It makes a constructivist argument that such global concepts are not sharply defined but are dynamic abstractions, continuously drawing from and shaping the diverse categories and circumstances of different societies and institutions.
