EDITOR'S NOTES	105
ARTICLES
Conflict Education in a Special Needs Population Tricia S. Jones, Andrea M. Bodtker	109
In this study, the authors report on the introduction of a peer mediation and conflict education program in a school for special needs students and on the potential impact of this program on aggressive behaviors and conflict climate in the school.
Responding to a Schoolwide Conflict Resolution–Peer Mediation Program: Case Study of a Middle School Faculty Gary Matloff, Stephen W. Smith	125
The authors present findings of their research study examining the impact of faculty involvement on the acceptance of a schoolwide conflict resolution–peer mediation program.
To Mediate or Not to Mediate: Financial Outcomes in Mediated Versus Adversarial Divorces Mary G. Marcus, Walter Marcus, Nancy A. Stilwell, Neville Doherty	143
Focusing on the financial outcomes of adversarially managed and mediated divorces, this research project sampled four hundred cases in Connecticut. Although there were few differences in outcome, adversarial cases took more time and involved more postjudgment proceedings.
Evaluation of Participant Reactions to Premediation Group Orientation Richard D. Mathis, Zoe Tanner, Flo Whinery	153
Divorcing parents responded positively to a mandatory parenting education program offered through the Dallas County, Texas, courts. According to the study conducted by the authors, the group orientation program was a constructive component of the divorce mediation service.

PRACTICE

Reformulating Dispute Narratives Through Active Listening 161

Bruce Phillips

The author explores the use of active listening techniques as an important component in transforming parties' communications in mediation, thus helping them frame issues, gain insights, and develop solutions.

Practice Issues in Community Mediation 181

Robert E. Mackay, Amanda J. Brown

This article presents findings from a study of three approaches to community mediation introduced in Scotland. In particular, the authors consider the interface between mediation and the legal processes, the assumption that mediation is conducted in face-to-face sessions, and the need to be responsive to existing traditions within minority communities.

THEORY

Mediator Attitudes Toward Outcomes: A Philosophical View 197

Kevin Gibson

The author challenges the commonplace notion that the mediator is disinterested and neutral as to outcome, and proposes that mediators are in a unique position to raise questions when faced with agreements that are unsuitable or potentially hurtful to one of the parties.
